WINTER WEATHER TIPS FOR YOUR PETS

To Sweater or Not To Sweater

Sure, it's cute, but does your pup really need a dress up? Well, January 14th is dress up your pet day, so obviously there are pet owners that take this very seriously. In reality, if you have a thin animal that doesn't have a lot of body fat, or a short hair that doesn't have a lot of insulation, then you do need to take precautions to keep them warm when they are out in the elements.

Careful on the Ice This goes for all of you. Animals can slip and fall on the ice, same as humans. If ice exists, try going to the park for your walk instead.

I'm Cold Older animals, short-haired and skinny dogs get cold faster. Be especially careful with puppies.

Leave Animals Home Treat cold weather the same as you would hot weather. Don't leave your pets in the car during cold weather.

Keep Them On Leash Keep your dogs on leash when you are out. Especially in snowy conditions where the animal may not be visible because of snow depth. If you are dealing with a puppy, double up on this rule. An untrained, inexperienced pup can get in more trouble faster than you or they may expect.

Wipe Their Feet Many of you probably leave your walking shoes by the door. Roads are full of chemicals this time of year. Salts, anti-freeze and de-icers are used everywhere. Remember to wipe down your animals feet to keep those out of your house and out of their mouths.
